Information Automatically Logged

We use your IP address to help diagnose problems with our server and to administer our Web site. We also use this information to help us to make using our web site easier to use and more enjoyable.

In almost all cases, when you go to a web site, web servers log your interaction with the site in something called a log file. Standard log files like ours contain basic information such as what time what pages were viewed, and the IP address of the visitor. We use this information to analyse trends, administer the site, track user's movements, and gather broad demographic information for aggregate use. We make no effort to identify IP addresses with individual users.

The Friends of Nunhead Cemetery website cookie

The Friends of Nunhead Cemetery website uses a "session cookie" to identify your browser "session" as you move between pages on the website and perform activities. The cookie is delightfully named "72bb8782d91598a68f5cf1bc10b62150" and is deleted when you close your browser.

The website cookie allows our website to recognise each subsequent request from your browser as being the same browser that made the initial request to our website.

By knowing that each subsequent request is related to the first, our website is able to track your actions as you move around the website and to provide interactive features. By analysing how our website is being used in general, we can improve the website experience for future visitors. Should you experience any problems in using our website, our website developers may be able to use this information to track down your specific “user journey” and investigate and fix any issues that might arise.

The cookie itself is a very small text file that is stored on your device (for example, your PC or your phone) by your web browser. It contains a simple text code that your browser sends back to our website each time you browse to a new page. This allows the website to look up your specific session and associate data for that session with your browser. The data itself is not stored in your cookie but on the server(s) operating the website.

Each page on our website is generated by a sophisticated Content Management System (CMS). This system provides a number of interactive features where your experience may be tailored according to your past activity on the website. Such features require the “session cookie” to operate.

- The session cookie provides the ability for you to log on to our website using your unique user name (or e-mail address) and password.
- The session cookie provides the means to remember that you have submitted a form so that you are not asked to re-submit it.
- As we improve our website over time, similar and more advanced features may be added that also require a “session cookie” to operate.
